Highlights from 4se 2023: Insights, Inspiration, and Surprising Connections in Sports & Entertainment

Welcome back to the Spotlight! In advance of the long weekend, I had the pleasure of attending Sports Business Journal and Leaders Group's 4se (pronounced "force") 2023 focusing on marketing, branding and leadership in the sports and entertainment industries. There, I met handfuls of like-minded peers, while listening to panels of influential people sharing their experiences with the attendees, while highlighting the seemingly endless intersections between these industries.

Notably, conference attendees had the privilege of hearing athletes and entertainers such as 2 time Superbowl champion New York Giants players Eli Manning and Justin Tuck and rap icon Fat Joe talk candidly about how they have parlayed their professional careers into even loftier heights in the business world. Other highlights included an emphasis on the ascendancy of women's sports, impressive rap skills from Rhymefest and Golden State Warriors' Chief Legal Officer David Kelly (I graciously conceded he was the better rapping lawyer).

All in all, I came away from the event feeling inspired and dare I say cool? And that's notwithstanding an embarrassing blunder by me! Let's just say trying to shake hands while balancing a cup of rice and beans on a plate is more perilous than it sounds. Anyway, let's kick things off...

- Maryland-based Under Armour goes local for their NIL deal with University of Maryland basketball star, Diamond Miller. A Zales endorsement deal can't be too far away.
- Bank of America is sued by would-be Washington Commanders suitor Brian Davis' company, for allegedly flubbing a $7.1 billion offer. $500 billion in damages is being sought, which in Bank of America's defense seems egregious in light of the fact that the case concerns the Washington Commanders.

- Shaquille O'Neal and David Beckham's production companies are being housed under the newly formed Authentic Studios. Here's hoping a "Kazaam" and "Bend it Like Beckham" crossover is in development.
