Pre-Thanksgiving Feast: From Spielberg's New WWII Series to Innovative Snacks and MLB's Vegas Move

By Joshua Bloomgarden on 11.17.23 | Posted in Sports & Entertainment Spotlight

Welcome back to the Spotlight! With the Thanksgiving holiday coming up next week, the Spotlight will be on a one-week hiatus. But lest you worry, it's all gravy. I will do my best to load up your plate with all the fixings, squashed into a format easier to digest than your aunt's dry Thanksgiving turkey. As you'll find if you take a pecan-side, the cavity below is stuffed with all that's been cooking in the sports and entertainment kitchen. Although I am on a roll (I really know how to butter myself up), I will not yam-mer on with my corny puns and wordplay any longer. But on a serious note, despite all the really terrible things going on in the world these days, I challenge you all to set that aside in favor of something or someone for which to be thankful.

- Tom Hanks and Steven Spielberg are adding another World War II project (an AppleTV+ Series called "Masters of the Air") to go along with "Band of Brothers," "The Pacific" and "Saving Private Ryan" to their production credits that include "Saving Private Ryan." A sequel (to the war--not to the series) may well be in development.
 - Entertainment and sports agency, Creative Artists Agency launches a better-for-you snack company called Myna Snacks with the help of a popular digital media streamer and consumer packaged goods (CPG) expert. The products have zero percent dairy, soy, gluten and grains, zero percent artificial flavors, colors and preservatives, and fifteen percent commission.
 - Major League Baseball's owners unanimously approved the plans to have the Oakland Athletics viva in Las Vegas. Next item up for voting is whether to give the Vegas team 162 home games.
