

The Center for Real Estate at Rutgers Business School Names Meryl A.G. Gonchar to its Founding Advisory Board

June 9, 2015

We are proud to announce that our partner Meryl A.G. Gonchar, co-chair of the firm's Redevelopment & Land Use Department, has been appointed to the founding Advisory Board of The Center for Real Estate at Rutgers Business School.

The Center for Real Estate at Rutgers Business School is a rising academic program positioned to transform and inspire the next generation of real estate leaders by bringing together the industry's brightest and most influential executives to interact with students and set the academic course for the Center. Advisory Board members represent a diverse group of leaders in a variety of fields related to real estate. They share the common goal of fostering productive discussion in order to advance the study of real estate and meet the evolving needs of a diverse student population by providing real-world experiences and collegial access to the top minds in real estate.

"We are going to rely on our Advisory Board members to bring practical and real world knowledge and experiences from every sector of our industry into our Center with the goal of providing the most advanced and innovative curriculum and the most important and timely research available for real estate," said Morris A. Davis, the Paul V. Profeta Chair and Academic Director of the Center for Real Estate at Rutgers Business School. "The consolidation and dissemination of this knowledge will serve as a focal point for addressing New Jersey's, and subsequently the country's, difficult and complex business and real estate issues, and will inspire the next generation of real estate leaders."

Ms. Gonchar adds, "I am honored to be serving with many of today's real estate industry leaders on the Advisory Board of the Rutgers School of Business Center for Real Estate, and look forward to playing a role in furthering the Center's mission to train and develop tomorrow's industry leaders."
