Fallon is a member of the firm's Business Litigation Practice. Her experience and current work centers on representing companies and corporations, guiding them through any legal issues that may arise such as protecting intellectual property, resolving non-compete disputes, litigating shareholder controversies, and defending against white-collar criminal charges. She also has significant experience working on matters involving New York Child Victims Act claims.

As a business litigator, Fallon is an energetic and strategic problem solver. She puts her clients at ease by helping them to understand all aspects of the issues they're facing – explaining them in a way in which the clients can understand. Fallon ensures her clients are able to make informed decisions by bluntly outlining all possible outcomes and scenarios. Whether it's reaching a settlement, obtaining a judgment prior to trial, or taking a matter all the way to a judge or jury, Fallon is known for obtaining the most optimal and economical outcomes for her clients.

Fallon enjoys building relationships with her clients as she counsels them through their legal issues. Whether working on a client's initial matter, or assisting them through new problems that may arise, Fallon is always available to her clients, looking out for their best interest.

Fallon is also a member of the firm's Cannabis & Hemp Practice, where she monitors the ever-changing state and federal laws in order to provide counsel to cannabis companies looking to enter the New York State market. She works to anticipate any upcoming changes to those laws and helps clients prepare accordingly. Fallon also participated in the first ever New York State Bar Association Cannabis Law Section meeting. In addition, Fallon co-authored a Law360 article giving insight and analysis on New York's Conditional Adult Use Retail Dispensary licenses.

Fallon also has significant experience representing clients through National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) recalls, guiding them through the initial filing, organizing corrective action, assisting them in complying with ongoing reporting requirements, and eventually resolution.
