As energy reform sweeps across the state of New York, unique opportunities are arising for property owners and developers to manage and reduce the cost of energy consumption. From distributed energy generation and increased resiliency through the use of battery storage and microgrids, technological advances and regulatory changes are significantly changing the energy markets. At the heart of the change is New York's Reforming the Energy Vision (REV) initiative, and the profound changes it is bringing to the utility-consumer relationship. REV's goals of a cleaner, more resilient, distributed energy landscape for the state materialize differently in locations throughout New York and for different industries.

This event will highlight challenges and opportunity across the full spectrum of energy users, suppliers, regulators, and market experts. Our panelists will identify areas of critical need within western New York's energy landscape, discuss current and potential opportunities for distributed energy assets both in front of and behind the meter, elaborate on how western New York differs from other regions and consider what would be the maximum impact REV initiatives for property owners, developers, and consumers.
