As any European company attempting to do business in the United States knows, contracts and contracting styles are very different between Europe and the United States. This is a result of the substantial disparities in private litigation practice, and the possibility in the United States of significant private lawsuits over property damage and personal injury with associated multi-million dollar awards. Please join Hodgson Russ LLP and KBC Bank for a webinar about the importance of using U.S.-style contracts when doing business in the United States, including for the key areas of limiting overall liability, seeking protection against third party claims, and protecting your intellectual property rights.
