ABC News recently published an article that examined the New York State requirement for remote employees of New York-based companies to pay personal income tax to the Empire State. Currently, New Jersey is offering a state tax credit to residents who work from home and successfully appeal their New York tax assessment. Connecticut is considering a similar measure.

Open Weaver Banks was featured in the article as a New Jersey resident who works from home in New Jersey. She gave her insight on the tax credit and explained why she is in favor of New Jersey's program.
