

CORONAVIRUS E-MAIL SCAMS

Hodgson Russ Cybersecurity & Privacy Alert
March 13, 2020

Please be aware that cyber criminals are taking advantage of the opportunity to use Coronavirus as a new scam. They are crafting many Phishing e-mails related to the Coronavirus.

What do the e-mails look like?

These scams are similar to other types of phishing e-mails:

- They try to invoke a sense of urgency
- They ask you for donations to fight the virus, or support research
- They pretend to provide you with breaking news or “what the media is not telling you”

For specific examples and more information please Click Here.

What to look for:

- Look for bad grammar, misspellings and offers that are either too good to be true or may be monetizing recent news.
- E-mails with links or attachments from external sources that you were not expecting or don't recognize
- Anything asking you to enter your e-mail or other login credentials to authenticate to a site or obtain a download.
- Anything related to the Coronavirus from unknown or suspicious sources.

Remember: “When in doubt, give IT a shout”

If you have any questions regarding a message, or you click on a malicious link or attachment, please contact your company's IT Service Desk.

If you received this alert from a third party or from visiting our website, and would like to be added to our Cybersecurity & Privacy mailing list, or any other mailing list, please visit us at: <https://forms.hodgsonruss.net/sign-up-for-email-and-other-communications..html>

Attorneys

Jane Bello Burke
William Ciszewski III
Alfonzo Cutaia
Reetuparna Dutta
Patrick Fitzsimmons
Michael Flanagan
Michelle Merola
R. Kent Roberts
Gary Schober
Amy Walters

Practices & Industries

Cybersecurity & Privacy

