Laner Muchin Paralegal Lydia Huang shared her firsthand experience working in a law firm business immigration group with prospective paralegal studies candidates at Roosevelt University in Chicago on Thursday, August 4th.

The conference, hosted by Roosevelt University's Paralegal Studies Program, provided potential students with information on what to expect when working in key practice areas in a law firm setting. Lydia shared with the group her personal insights on working in a high-volume business immigration department, including the challenges and rewards of leading a variety of corporate clients and individuals to help them achieve their business immigration goals.
