As the pandemic wears on, a new phenomenon, known as the Great Resignation, is taking over the United States' business landscape. Contrary to everything traditional that management held true regarding labor markets, individuals are abandoning their positions in the workforce as employers scramble to deal with the fallout.

Join Laner Muchin Partner William Wake as he discusses the Great Resignation and its implications on the current labor market for employers in the upcoming President's Resource Organization (PRO) Round Table Discussion.

The panel will dive into the forces driving this uncharted phenomenon and actions companies can take to defend against or take advantage of the situation.
