ASSOCIATE

Overview

Even before she became a lawyer, Molly served others through advocacy. In college Molly spent a year working for AmeriCorps NCCC, serving various nonprofits and federal agencies such as the National Park Service. After college she taught English at a school in Thailand. These experiences taught her the impact service can have on an organization and solidified her desire to be a lawyer.

As a member of the General Liability Service Group, Molly represents clients in various claims, including breach of contract, negligence and discrimination claims.

Prior to joining the firm, Molly worked for the in-house legal department at a national insurance company as part of a corporate fellowship program. The experience allowed her to see what corporations expect from outside counsel. She draws on this experience today to best serve her clients.
