Molly Arranz was recently quoted in the CNBC article, "City Ransomware Attacks and Huge Payouts Mean a Once-Private Corporate Problem has Gone Public." In the article, Molly discusses how criminal organizations have refined their techniques and how ransomware attacks on private businesses has stayed relatively quiet since they are not required to report the attacks to shareholders or regulators. "That's why you're not hearing of more of these, and it's not because companies are hiding the ball," Arranz said. "They're complying with what's legally required of them."
