Jeremy litigates constitutional, statutory, and regulatory issues before federal and state courts and administrative agencies. He has developed successful legal arguments that have been adopted in decisions at all levels of the federal judicial system, including the U.S. Supreme Court. His amicus work has also been cited favorably in appellate court decisions and in media coverage of cases.

In addition to private practice, Jeremy has worked in all three branches of the federal government. He is adept at leveraging his government experience to achieve favorable outcomes in matters involving federal administrative agencies, including rulemakings, enforcement matters, and challenges to agency action.

Representative Matters

- Successfully argued a first of its kind administrative appeal involving arbitrary and capricious review of agency licensing decisions with national security implications.
- Represented a campaign committee in obtaining a preliminary injunction against enforcement of a state campaign finance regulation that violated the First Amendment. See Perdue v. Kemp, 584 F. Supp. 3d 1310 (N.D. Ga. 2022).
- Obtained dismissal of first ever citizen-suit brought pursuant to the Federal Election Campaign Act, successfully briefing argument that an intervening D.C. Circuit decision prohibited the district court from reviewing the action. See CREW v. Am. Action Network, 590 F. Supp. 3d 164 (D.D.C. 2022).
- Obtained a ruling from the D.C. Circuit holding, as a matter of first impression, that interstate compact entities are not federal
