

Wiley Files Supreme Court Amicus Brief for U.S. Chamber of Commerce

AFTER COURT AGREES TO HEAR CHALLENGE TO CALIFORNIA LAW REQUIRING CERTAIN NONPROFITS TO DISCLOSE DONOR INFORMATION

March 3, 2021

Washington, DC - On behalf of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Wiley filed an amicus brief with the U.S. Supreme Court in support of petitioners who are challenging a California requirement that certain nonprofits disclose their major donors to the state. Earlier this year, the Court agreed to hear a First Amendment challenge to the state's disclosure requirement by two advocacy groups, in Americans for Prosperity Foundation v. Becerra and Thomas More Law Center v. Becerra.

The petitioners have argued the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit ruled incorrectly when it found they failed to show that complying with California's donor disclosure requirement would chill their First Amendment associational rights.

"The Ninth Circuit's decision departs from the protections for associational privacy that this Court has long deemed required by the First Amendment," Wiley argued in the U.S. Chamber brief. "The decision upheld the California Attorney General's blanket, up-front, governmental demand for the individual identities and addresses of major donors to private nonprofit organizations, without requiring any showing that the demand was narrowly tailored to an important government interest."

The amicus brief describes the Ninth Circuit decision as one that departs from the Court's "strict test" for reviewing burdens on First Amendment associational privacy rights, and that - if allowed to stand - would weaken protection for associational privacy rights and
